needle back through the canvas. You are almost certain to split existing stitches in the back and become badly entangled. Instead, unthread the needle and pull the stitches out one by one with the end of the needle.

To repair weak or torn canvas, simply cut a piece of matching canvas a little larger than the disaster area. Baste in place with cotton thread taking care to match the repair piece mesh for mesh with the original canvas. Stitch over the double thickness as you would if it were only the original single thickness of canvas.

BLOCKING

On a clean wooden board tape or tack the brown paper on which you have already marked the outline of the canvas and the four register marks. Lay the needlepoint face down on the brown paper. Dampen the back of the needlepoint by steaming with an iron held well above the actual surface of the canvas; if you don't have a steam iron, sponge the back of the canvas until it is wet but not saturated. Secure the four corners with
